TUESDAY	Strand: Customs & Institutions Sub-Strand: Rites of passage: puberty rites	 Assist Learners to identify modern ways of naming a newly born child in their Community. Assist Learners to describe the difference the old traditional system and the modern way of naming a child. Learners brainstorm to dramatize the modern way of naming a child. 			e old	Reflect on the advantages of the modern system of naming a child over the old system.
	Review Learners knowledge on the previous lesson. Naming a child, popularly referred to as "Christ usually through the baptism ceremony in Christ especially Catholic culture, and to a lesser deg those Protestants who practice infant baptism. Orthodoxy infants are traditionally named on day of life in a special service conducted either.				y, nong istern ghth home or in church.

		Often, Christians will adhere to local traditions of the land in which they were born. For example, in Kerala, the traditional Hindu custom of tying an aranjanam is followed even in Christian families.
		In the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints infants are traditionally given a name and a blessing on the first Sunday of the month after they are born by the child's father if he holds priesthood authority to do so and if the ordinance has been authorized by his local ecclesiastical leader. The timing may be adapted according to family circumstances
THURSDAY	Strand: Listening & Speaking Sub-Strand: Listening Comprehension	 Discuss with Learners on how to analyze the purpose of texts in reading text. Assist learners to identify facts and opinions in a text. Learners in small groups to discuss the differences between facts and opinions in a text. 	Summarize the lesson
	Review Learners knowledge on the previous lesson.	What is a Fact? On the other hand, a fact is a statement that can be proven beyond any doubt. Facts are objective, meaning the veracity is independent of anyone's perception or beliefs. They can be verified and supported with indisputable evidence. Facts often rely on denotative language, or language with a specific, explicit, or direct meaning. The statement "water boils at 212 degrees Fahrenheit" uses denotative language and doesn't rely on any implications or gray areas. That doesn't mean that it can't be argued against, however. At higher altitudes, water boils at lower temperatures, so this could be disputed. However, that doesn't make it an opinion because it was still proven with evidence.
		Examples of Facts Some examples of facts might include:
		"Columbus Day is observed in the United States

each year, on the second Monday in October."

- "Abraham Lincoln was the 16th president of the United States, and served in this role from 1861 until 1865."
- "Paris is the capital of France and is home to over 2 million people."
- "Approximately 48 million households in the United States have a pet dog."

Opinion vs. Fact

When determining whether a statement is a fact or an opinion, the following two questions can be asked:

- 1. Can the statement be proven to be either true or false?
- 2. Does this statement refer to an author's personal beliefs, ideas, or feelings about the topic?

If the answer to the first question is "it cannot," and the answer to the second is "it does," then the statement is an opinion. On the other hand, if the answer to the first one is "it can," and the answer to the second is "it doesn't," then the statement is a fact. These two questions can be applied to the statements "boiling water is hot" and "water boils at 212 degrees Fahrenheit" to determine whether it is a fact or an opinion.

"Boiling water is hot."

- Can the statement be proven to be either true or false? It cannot. This statement can not be proven since "hot" is subjective and connotative. Different people have different interpretations of "hot."
- 2. Does this statement refer to an author's personal beliefs, ideas, or feelings about the topic? It does. While the reasons for saying this are ones that most people would agree with, such as the fact that boiling water can burn skin, this still relies on the author's own perception of the word

		"hot."
FRIDAY	Strand: Reading	 In turns, Learners brainstorm to read longer texts. Assist Learners to apply summary skills to identify the main ideas and supporting ideas in the reading text. 	Learners brainstorm to answer comprehension questions on the text.
	Sub-Strand: Reading Select a unit reader text from the	3. Learners in small groups to read long texts silently for 10 minutes and discuss about the main ideas in the text.
		How to Compose a Summary;
	Ghanaian Language reading book. Discuss meanings of keywords or vocabularies in the reading text with the Learners.	 Find the Main Idea. In order to write a summary that demonstrates all the relevant points of the text, it is necessary to understand the main narrative of the passage. Simplify the Text. Create a Descriptive Outline. Write the Summary. Review your Summary
