WEEKLY LESSON PLAN – WEEK 10

		ensuring you are not misrepresenting facts. Being honest can gain you trust from others and show that you have personal integrity. Honesty can help you to build up a reputation for reliability and trustworthiness. This can help you meet other goals, like building positive interpersonal relationships and a respectable reputation. In this sense, it's what sociologists call an instrumental value. Different moral frameworks will have competing thresholds for when it is and isn't appropriate to lie – i.e. should we be dishonest in order to protect someone's feelings, or keep a child's belief in Santa alive? Example of Honesty If you found a wallet full of cash on the street, what would you do? An honest person would make an effort to locate the owner and not decide that the money was theirs without putting effort into finding the true owner. 2. Compassion Compassion is when we feel sympathy for another person and are inclined to help those in need. To be compassionate is considered a moral virtue. The term compassion originates from the Latin word compati, which means "to suffer with". Compassionate people generally demonstrate prosocial behavior, meaning their actions help others rather than harm them. They may also engage in altruistic behavior, where they help others out of compassion without expecting anything in return. There are many examples of acts of compassion that can be seen in our everyday interactions. These can range from simple gestures like helping someone else who's struggling with their groceries, to devoting your life to the care of the sick and elderly. Example of Compassion If you see someone crying, you may feel a responsive sense that you want to help that person overcome their sadness and distress. A compassionate person might put their arm around the crying friend and offer some words of comfort and understanding. 3. Respect Respect refers to honoring others by treating them with dignity. To be respectful, we would aim to be polite, kind, and honor other people's wishes. Respect can be demonstrated through words, actions, or gifts. Being respectful doesn't mean we have to agree with others. 		fact, we often need to leverage the moral virtue of respect in times when we disagree with others. These are times when you will acknowledge other people's rights to differing opinions and their inherent human worth and dignity, regardless of their opinions, race, religion, gender, or socio-economic status. Example of Respect Even if you disagree with someone else's political views, you will listen to them without interrupting them or trying to bring them down. You won't speak badly about them and will continue to acknowledge their right to be treated with dignity
